Project Overview

Moffat Bay is a Pacific Northwest lodge reservation web application built around a First Nations cultural theme, inspired by the indigenous heritage of the San Juan Islands. The goal of the application is to give guests a seamless experience from discovery to booking. Users can browse the lodge, explore local attractions, create and look up reservations, and manage their accounts all in one place. The mockups in this document represent the full intended user journey across nine pages.

Design Direction

The visual design leans into the Pacific Northwest setting and First Nations culture of the San Juan Islands. The color palette centers around sea blue and deep sea green as the primary tones, complemented by whites and grays to keep the design clean and modern while still feeling grounded in the natural environment of the region. Native American imagery and cultural tones are woven throughout the design, including the totem pole logo, to honor the San Juan First Nations identity and culture behind the lodge rather.

For typography, the mockups use Montserrat for clean readable body and UI text, Permanent Marker for character and personality in accent elements, and a Canva student font for headings that will be substituted with a similar Google Fonts option (such as Playfair Display or Raleway) for the actual HTML implementation.
